They exist in a variety of forms – from photos only to images with brief comments or captions and written essays accompanied by shots.

1.2 Purpose

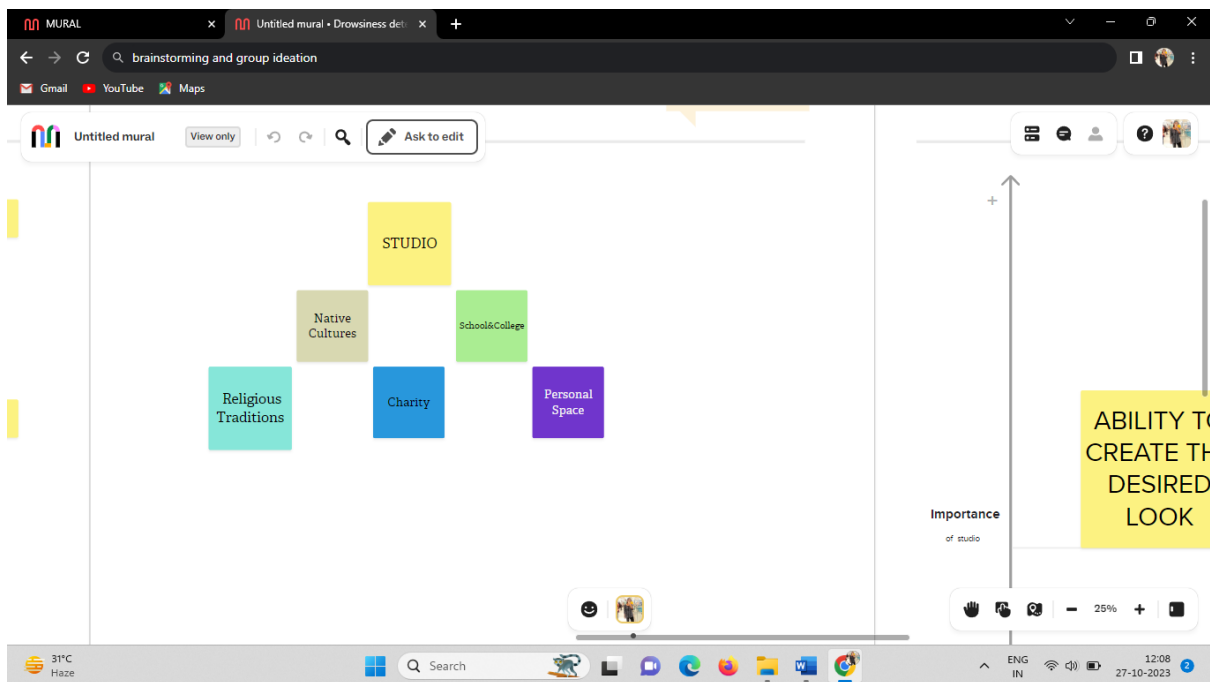

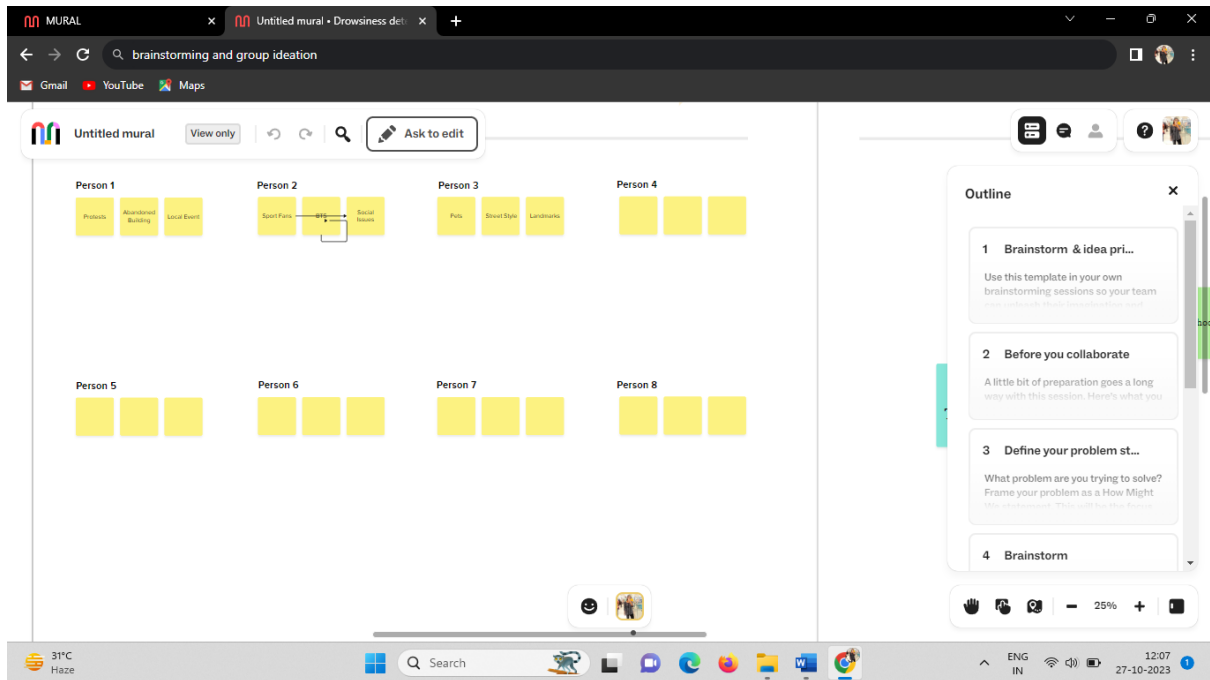

A photography studio is a workspace specifically designed and built for the purpose of taking photographs. In its basic form a studio will feature a well lit space with a blank backdrop to allow the capturing of images in an environment free from obtrusive external light sources. The required lighting for an image can then be 'built' by the photographer using lighting equipment and subject placement. Professional photography studios are jam packed with the most expensive photography, lighting and editing equipment, providing photographer with all the equipment and resources they require to capture highly specific images.
